'Fallen Folly Leaves in the Late Light of Autumn'

I went on a walk with my mum to the Folly. We had walked all the way round and were heading back when I noticed the light that shone through the trees. I like this photo because the colours really remind me of Autumn.

My first autumn in the United Kingdom

The end of one season or the beginning of the another-depends on how one sees it?!

Ned, year 8

My photo represents autumn because there is a carved, candlelit pumpkin sitting on dry leaves in a damp tree. Halloween is also symbolic of autumn.

Autumn may mean to some, leaves changing colour and falling off the trees, or the weather getting colder but to me it means something different. I think autumn is about seeing something new; like you wake up one morning and the whole world has changed around you. I like seeing new things in autumn - things you don't normally see. Other seasons have their specialties too, like in winter there is snow, in spring there is new life and in summer it is warm (well not in England!) I think my picture shows the fact that in Autumn, you find things in a place that has once just had grass but out of the blue something different appears.
